3 Friends You Haven't Met Yet Roger Robbins

Good books and their authors get passed by, or simply forgotten, as time goes on. Here are 3 non-fiction writers worth meeting, or getting re-acquainted with.

Robert Caro, as biographer, is in a class by himself. He has spent decades writing a series of books on Lyndon Johnson that teach and entertain and amaze. The depth of his research, and the rich canvas of American History that he paints, is a journey worth any reader's attention.

Roger Angell covers baseball like nobody else. A long-time editor at The New Yorker, he writes from the fan's perspective with insights and sparkling prose that invite reading again and again. Let him take you back to baseball in the 1970s; let him recapture Boston's great World Series adventure of 1975. You'll feel as if you were in the bleachers beside Angell with a ballpark hot dog in hand.

Alvin Toffler is the author of the classic "Future Shock". You've heard Admission to the planetarium show is an additional $5 each. You will be asked to present your Library Pass at the front desk on the day of your visit.

TEEN TALK with Linda

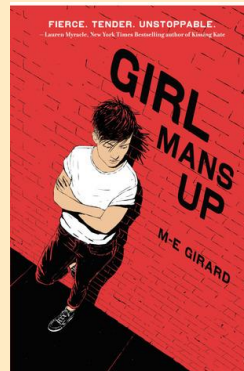

Star Daughter
by Shveta Thakrar

If the night sky holds many secrets, it holds Sheetal Mistry's secret the closest. A secret that explains why her hair is the silver of starlight, or why some nights the stars call Sheetal by
